

ABSTRACT

European Research Network On Philanthropy
8th International Conference Copenhagen, July 13-14, 2017

---

How are youth philanthropy practices transforming the philanthropic field?

Submitted by: Elodie Dessy
Organisation: HEC-Liège, Management, Belgium
Author(s): Elodie Dessy Virginie Xhauflair
Keywords: philanthropy, practices, youth, transformations, institutional change
Topic: Social innovation, crowdfunding and philanthropy
Research method: Qualitative
Geographical focus: Single country (European)
Type of article: Research article

Abstract:

How are youth philanthropy practices transforming the philanthropic field?

This question implies two assumptions. The first assumption is that the philanthropic field is changing. Since the early 2000s, some actors and organisations have considered the simple grant as outdated and promoted other philanthropic practices, which they thought as innovative, progressive and disruptive. In the literature, these supposedly new practices are said to emerge from different groups of actors, which are characterized as changemakers, and among others are young people. (GORDON, 2014; MAIR & HEHENBERGER, 2014) Which leads to the second assumption: youth involved in philanthropic activities spur transformations in the philanthropic field.

If youth are said to take part into the philanthropic field and are considered innovators, their concrete philanthropic practices have however been ignored by academic literature. As for grey literature, it has merely explored issues regarding youth motivations, fundraising and wealth legacy. (FALK & NISSAN, 2007) Only recently, studies have looked into initiatives coming from young people themselves. (BOKOFF & DILLON, 2014; MOODY & GOLDSEKER, 2013) From these studies are emerging several assessments and questions, but those have rarely been addressed by systematic academic research. Therefore, it is often complicated to understand how youth engage themselves, how they mobilize resources they can access, and how they put these at the service of public interest causes.

In this context, our research question revolves around two aspects: first, to identify philanthropic practices coming from young people; second, to question the potential transformative characteristic of their practices. On one hand, we rely on the literature on institutional change (BATTILANA, LECA & BOXENBAUM, 2009; LAWRENCE & SUDDABY, 2006), so as to conceptualize the notion of transformation. On the other hand, we produce a state-of-the-art about and around youth philanthropy. The paper presents the analytic framework allowing us to grasp youth philanthropic practices, and to analyse their transformative potential for the philanthropic field.

Most important references:

- BATTILANA, J., LECA, B. & BOXENBAUM, E., 2009, "How Actors Change Institutions: Towards a Theory of Institutional Entrepreneurship", The Academy of Management Annals, 3 (1).
- BOKOFF, J. & DILLON, A., 2014, Scanning the Landscape of Youth Philanthropy. Observations and Recommendations for Strengthening a Growing Field.
- FALK, K.H. & NISSAN, L.G., 2007, Vision for and Brief History of Youth Philanthropy.
- GORDON, J., 2014, "A stage of venture philanthropy", Venture Capital, 16 (2).
- LAWRENCE, T.B. & SUDDABY, R., 2006, "Institutions and institutional work", in CLEGG, S.R., HARDY, C. LAWRENCE, T.B. & NORD, W.R. (Eds), Handbook of organization studies.
- MAIR, J. & HEHENBERGER, L., 2014, "Front-Stage and Backstage Convening: The Transition from Opposition to Mutualistic Coexistence in Organizational Philanthropy", Academy of Management Journal, 57 (4).
- MOODY, M & GOLDSEKER, S., 2013, NextGen Donors. Respecting Legacy, Revolutionizing Philanthropy, Johnson Center for Philanthropy & 21/64.